

SUKI'S STYLE

Why English rose Suki Waterhouse has drawn the eye of not just boyfriend Bradley Cooper but fashion watchers around the world

"It" girl, model, actress, Bradley Cooper's lady love – Suki Waterhouse already wears many hats. And she's about to become even more recognizable to Canadians thanks to a plethora of plum campaigns, including her latest as the face of Forever 21 – a timely role for the 21-year-old.

It helps that the British lover of vintage clothing is frequently spotted frolicking with Bradley, whether at the Eiffel Tower in Paris, on the sandy shores of Hawaii or in the stands at Wimbledon. While the pair has remained mum about their relationship, Suki did reveal to Hello! Canada that for her, falling in love comes naturally.

"I don't think you go out looking; relationships just happen. I think they are planned out for us before we even know it."

Here, the spunky up-and-comer, who counts fellow models Cara Delevingne and Georgia May Jagger among her closest friends, shares shopping secrets, the best city to hunt for vintage treasures and how she broke a classmate's nose.

Whose closet would you love to raid? Pattie Boyd. She's my ultimate '60s girl icon.

What's the secret to putting together a great outfit? Time! Time and thought. Plus staying calm. When I'm really rushed strange things happen.

What is your favourite city to go shopping? It can be hard to find good stuff, but my best finds so far have been in Berlin. I love to go searching in a new city.

As a child, did you dream of becoming a model? Growing up, it was karate. My dad got me into it at a young age – he's a black belt. Then I broke a girl's nose in a competition and it was quite traumatizing.

Around that time I started modelling and there was a lesser chance of hurting people! [Laughs]

Do your parents support your modelling career? As long as I'm happy and not asking for an allowance, they're cool.

You've recently started acting. Have your friends in the business given you any tips? Breathe. You sometimes forget to breathe properly when you're nervous, and I guess it doesn't end well. H

REPORT: JULIA SEIDL

Lights, camera, action! Suki preps before her Forever 21 shoot. Left: the model strikes a pose for the brand.

FACES OF FALL

Their gorgeous grins and leggy figures have kept these models at the top – in some cases, for decades! Find out where you'll be seeing their charms next

CARA DELEVINGNE

The British model, who at 21 is already dubbed the next Kate Moss (she, too, is only 5-foot-8) has her famous brows to thank for helping send her career into overdrive this year. For fall, she's snagged campaigns for DKNY, Pepe Jeans, Mulberry and Saint Laurent; that's on top of closing Burberry's show at London Fashion Week.

KATE MOSS At 39, Kate shows no signs of slowing down on the career front. In fact, a look at her recent portfolio proves the model mom is still smoking hot. Rimmel, Versace, Stuart Weitzman, Kérastase and St. Tropez have all booked the lithe beauty for their fall/winter campaigns.

STUART WEITZMAN

GISELE BUNDCHEN

The highest-paid model in the world, Gisele, 33, took home $42 million last year – which is more than her football-star husband, Tom Brady, earned. This fall, you can spot the Brazilian beauty and mother of two in ads for Chanel, H&M and Louis Vuitton.

